

Requirements for Reproducing or Adapting Copyright-Protected Material for Publication in JAMA Network Open Guidelines for Authors

Permission to reproduce or adapt copyright-protected material (tables, figures, videos, or substantial portions of text) in JAMA Network Open must be obtained from the copyright owner. In general, publishers hold the copyright to material previously published in journals, books, and digital media, but in some instances, especially for illustrations, photographs, and videos, the original creator of the work may retain copyright. Copyright in unpublished material is usually held by the creator of the work. JAMA Network Open is an open access journal; thus, permissions are needed for re-use without restrictions or the need for additional permission.

If you wish to include copyright-protected material in your article, please provide BOTH of the following items:

1. Written permission from the copyright owner of the material (see instructions that follow); AND
2. For previously published material, a copy of original publication (journal article, book chapter, etc) in which the content appeared.

How to Request Permission

For previously published material, direct your request for grant permission to the permissions department of the journal or publisher. For unpublished material, contact the creator of the work to find out who owns the copyright. Request permissions as soon as possible. In the event that your request cannot be granted, you will need to substitute other material.

Include all of the following information in your request (see attached form):

1. Your Contact Information

Name, address, telephone number, and email address.

2. Information About the Material to Be Used
